

So today I went into the District office and this is how it went.

"I have some technical questions. Firstly, is the District of North Vancouver a corporation?"

Clerk; "Yes, I believe it is, the Corporation of the District of North Vancouver."

"I have a corporation and I am required to post the incorporation document in a visible place. Where is that document posted for the District?"

Clerk, looking around; "I can't see it, I actually don't know where, let me look it up on the computer."

"I have several other technical questions, Is there anyone else I can talk to?"

Clerk; "Yes, please go and see the Finance Clerk."

"Hello, is the District a corporation?"

Finance; "Yes it is."

"Ok, where is the incorporation document displayed?"

Finance looks around, sees nothing, starts looking in her computer for an answer. (Wha? It should be within sight on the wall.)

"Never mind, I have another question. I have a parking ticket which went to collections, and the collections clerk told me that it's a common but mistaken belief that they have purchased the debt from the city, and that in reality the ticket still resides in the jurisdiction of the District."

Finance: "Yes, that's correct."

"Alright, my next question; If the District is a corporation, that's a dead, fictitious legal entity. I am not a corporation, I'm a living, breathing man. As such, am I not superior in every way to a corporation? Isn't it true that a corporation has no jurisdiction, superiority or exalted position above a living, breathing man?"

Finance; "Yes, that's true."

(Holeeeeeee moley)

"Can you produce a signed contract between me the living man and the corporation agreeing to me being beholden to pay any service charges of any type?"

Finance; "No."

"Ok then, my next question is that the ticket was addressed to my name in all caps, which is legalese used strictly to designate a corporation. I am not a corporation, that entity doesn't even exist. Me being addressed as a man it would be in lower case. So why is my name in all caps on the ticket?"

Finance: "Well, that's just how it comes out on the computer. In fact, the whole address is also in all caps, so that must be just how it's done."

"The upper or lower case of the address has no meaning in legalese, but the name certainly does. The reason the address is in all caps is for the purpose of camouflaging the all caps name."

Anyway, next question. The ticket says that my 'vehicle' was parked incorrectly, but who decided it was a vehicle as opposed to a private conveyance? In legalese, a vehicle is for business, corporate, as in for-profit work."

Finance: "I think the name vehicle applies to all automobiles no matter how they're being employed."

"Ok, my next question is regarding political neutrality. I've found at least 4 municipalities which have published bylaws establishing politically neutral crosswalks and flags. They won't paint crosswalks to highlight any political affiliation nor fly any flags other than Canada, Province or municipal. Why is this district not political neutral?"

Finance; "I don't know that, it's a question for the mayor during their public meetings, or through the question portal on the website."
